

Code of Ethics

The journal Dialogues d'Histoire Ancienne (DHA) is a generalist journal in the sciences of antiquity that publishes original contributions, peer-reviewed by at least two external scholars having no conflict of interest with the author, upon the advice of the journal's own editorial board and board of experts. The experts' advice may be supplemented by further peer reviews in cases of divergent opinions. Peer reviews are always referred anonymously to the author. Once the article has been accepted, a contract is drawn, by which the parties mutually commit themselves to respect the deontology of academic publication and dissemination. Articles turned down for publication are returned to the author enclosed with a letter from the editor in chief of the journal who, after consideration of the peer reviewers and boards, explains the reasons for the refusal and encourages the author to revise his or her work. The journal is committed to respecting and enforcing respect for the impartiality and confidentiality of peer reviewing and rejects all forms of discrimination. The guiding principle is the academic value of submissions. Articles involving plagiarism and sources truncated or distorted with fraudulent intent are clearly rejected by the journal. The journal Dialogues d'Histoire Ancienne promotes academic dialogue, but no ad hominem statements or attacks are tolerated. While the journal and its experts are committed to respecting this code of ethics, authors must also refrain from plagiarism, multiple publication, conflict of interest, and libelous discourse directed at any particular authors.

Open to all authors

Dialogues d'Histoire Ancienne (DHA) is committed to openness and inclusivity in scholarly publishing without author-facing charges for reading or publishing.

We welcome submissions from all authors, regardless of their institutional affiliation, geographical location, or academic status.

Submissions only must align with the aims and scope of the journal and meet the required quality standards once the reviewing process is completed.

Community-owned

Dialogues d'Histoire Ancienne (DHA) is owned by université Marie et Louis Pasteur, Besançon, a public institution dedicated to advancing research and scholarship. The journal's ownership and governance structure reflect its mission to support open and accessible academic publishing. We confirm that any commercial service providers involved in our operations only deal with service-related aspects of journal publishing. All content-related aspects of publishing such as submission, peer review, acceptance, publication frequency and scope of the journal are controlled by the editors of the journal.
